PROBLEMS FOLLOWING THE WAR

"No living man", declares the Houston Post, (Democratic) "can at this time anticipate the far reaching adjustments of the world's international relations. No living man can contemplate even the results that are just ahead without realizing what a solemn and tremendous responsibility is soon to fall upon the shoulders of those who must direct the future course of the government."

Yet millions of living men are thinking of that time and of its responsibilities, and they are planning to shape their immediate political action so that the "solemn and tremendous responsibility" of which the Houston Post speaks may fall upon shoulders which are capable to bear it.

The small domestic problems around which our customary partisan contests have raged are as nothing compared with the world aspects of the problems just ahead. With all this we are in cordial agreement.

Yet it will not do to lose sight entirely of our domestic problems—on upon the manner in which we deal with them will depend very largely, as the President would say, our success in dealing with the greater world problems, which will be thrust upon us. For example, if we are to leave ourselves without tariff protection after the European war ceases, we shall be in no position to cope with the commercial problems which will come upon us with the release of Europe's fighting millions from the trenches and with their return to productive pursuits.

Strong and capable constructive statesmanship will be the crying need of this country after Europe's war is over; and the election next November will show whether we are to have it or not. If a Republican President and a Republican Congress are chosen, we may look with confidence for a proper solution of the problems which will present themselves. If the present shifting and vacillating Executive is to be continued in office and his inept and narrow minded party is to control legislation, the future will be dark with misapprehensions. The record of the two parties will show which is the more deserving to take up the "solemn and tremendous responsibility." There can be no two opinions about it. It is the Republican party which has the character and the capacity to render the needed service to the nation—and the nation will not hesitate in making the selection.
